

Arkia

Arkia is an ancient city founded as a trading town in the middle of fertile plains. Its current claim to fame is being at the bottom of the hill on which stands the Temple of the Rainbow Seekers.

The town is square in shape, with a wall surrounding it. The town is 720 yards long on a side. The population of the town is approximately 43,000 people. Of course there is a fluctuation of population with all the travelers coming through town for various reasons. Surrounding the town are fields laid out in a grid pattern. The fields provide enough produce for the town, with enough to spare for a good trade.

There are 81 square blocks, each 80 yards on a side. People refer to the squares in which they live by a two coordinate system. For example, someone living in 2-6 lives in the northwest of town. The origin is in the southwest corner of town. On the wall surrounding town there are towers at the corner of each block.

The wall surrounding the town is twenty feet tall on the outside, and the inner wall is thirty feet tall. There are crenellations on the outer section of the wall.